

Conclusions

- Small amounts of involuntary muscle activity substantially limit measures of passive joint range of motion
- On average, for every 1% increase in plantar flexion torque, dorsiflexion range of motion decreases by more than 2°
- Therefore, when measuring the range of passive motion at a joint, small amounts of muscle activity should not be ignored